Office of Academic Innovation:

As a Computer Information Systems student, I had the opportunity to apply my education in web development with departments across campus such as the Office of Student Life and the Office of Academic Innovation.

As a web designer, I used my front-end skills to maintain and redesign the websites for both departments. I use tools such as Cascade content management system, Photoshop, and Canva to modify the look and feel of the sites within the cultural centers to improve and provide a reliable experience as many students during the pandemic turned to websites for information. Under Academic Innovation, I currently provide website support in the form of maintaining many pages under the domain for broken links, updating event details and marketing materials. Some of the websites I manage are Learn through discovery, Academic Innovation, I-Corps, the Hatchery, PolyX, and CPP Invests. Currently, my most important project is the design and implementation of the Innovation Incubator website. As a student graduating into the workforce, I know the importance of engaging with the university early in my academic career especially with institutions that cultivate experiences for the future of work. I have been contributing to the project with wire frames and mockups for new web pages that translate the who, what, and why so that the campus community can know the different initiatives under Innovation Incubator and participate in their own transformative learning.

My experience with Academic Innovation has helped me to develop a sense of service to the Cal Poly Pomona campus community. I support the mission of Academic Innovation in cultivating student success through experiential learning and I would value making a contribution to that effort through this position.

Sincerely,

Josue Ruiz
